The Saronic Islands

Hydra Hydra bustles with fishing boats, ferries and yachts, backed by a steep amphitheater of whitewashed houses with colorful doors and walls hung with bougainvillea and hibiscus. Tavernas do a brisk business as locals and visitors gather for waterfront breakfasts or dinners under soft harbor lights. Shops are full of handmade lace dresses and woolen shawls.

Spetses Spetes is a particular favorite of Athenian families and European travelers who delight in the island's beaches and the informality of island life, as well as waterside restaurants around the small harbor of Spetses Town. By horse-drawn carriage or on foot, visitors can travel a mile to the old harbor and hike up the hill past lovely old ship owners' mansions to the 17th-century monastery of Agios Nikolaos. Leaving town and heading west, you'll find the Vrellou, the first of many fine beaches, and further on is scenic Zogeria. To the south is the finest beach in the Saronic islands, Agia Anargiri. The interesting looking islet to the east of Spetses is privately owned by shipping tycoon Stavros Niarchos.
